Acknowledgments

I am indebted to a variety of individuals for their contributions to the publication of this volume. I am very grateful to Deal W. Hudson, Anthony O. Simon, and Curtis L. Hancock for their suggestions and advice regarding the preparation of this volume, and to David J. McGonagle, Director of The Catholic University of America Press, for his advice on the technical aspects of its layout and design, and to Joseph Pappin III for his assistance during the early stages of its compilation.

Of course, it is to the authors of the contributed articles that I am most grateful, for the ultimate value of this volume is due to the depth and breadth of their scholarship and to the clarity of the expression of their insights. In particular, I am indebted to Jude P. Dougherty, for writing such a lucid and provocative Introduction, and to Curtis L. Hancock, for contributing a fitting Epilogue, one which is both frank and, at the same time, optimistic in its assessment of the theme of the volume.

In addition, I would like to pay particular tribute and express my profound gratitude to Jonathan Raymon, a Philosophy major at Loras College and a veritable magician with a computer, for his tireless, patient, cheerful, and extremely skillful preparation of the typescript for publication and imaginative design of the front and back covers. His contribution was invaluable. I am also most appreciative of the material and moral support provided by Jim O'Brien, by my Philosophy Department, particularly by Joe Magno, Chairperson; Gladys Fitzpatrick, department secretary, and by the administration of Loras College, especially Ken Kraus, Academic Dean, and Joachim Froehlich, President.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife, Nancy, for her understanding, never-wavering support, and cheerful optimism throughout the preparation of this volume.
